

WCD Forms the Environmental Claims Center

Pennington, NJ, June 30, 2008—WCD Group is pleased to announce the formation of the WCD Environmental Claims Center. The Claims Center provides support to attorneys, insurance carriers, risk managers, and merger and acquisition professionals. The Environmental Claims Center provides due diligence support, as well as expertise in claims or litigation matters involving environmental, engineering, remediation, hazardous materials, and health and safety issues. The Center's primary objectives are to help clients avoid, understand, manage, and seek recovery for environmental claims. Due to the increase in environmental claims and the importance of understanding the environmental liability or exposure in a transaction, the need for highly specialized experts has become a critical requirement to meet the ever-growing demands of development and economic growth while protecting the environment. With the complexity of technical and regulatory issues, professionals are relying more and more on outside firms to provide professional, expert support.

"The Environmental Claims Center is staffed by engineering, environmental, legal, and finance professionals, and is supported by a national network of technical experts to assist our clients in the field or in the courtroom," stated Wm. Chip D'Angelo, President of WCD. "WCD has the capabilities and commitment to provide emergency response management, cause and origin investigation, mitigation planning, remediation and restoration project management, and complex claims management and support. Most of our professionals have been qualified as experts and have testimony experience," D'Angelo added.

The scenarios under which a claim can arise are many. They can result from an unanticipated, unexpected, or unintended event, finding, or occurrence. They can result from cost over-runs, change orders, or contract breaches, regulatory actions or demands, or as a recovery against an insurance policy.
